Chord Relationships

1. The three chords most frequently used are built upon the first, fourth, and fifth degrees of the major scale.
2. The next chord most frequently encountered is a minor chord built upon the sixth degree of the scale.
3. Two commonly used chords, that don't occur naturally in the key, are major chords built on the second and flatted seventh degrees of the scale.
4. Two other common chords are minor chords built on the second and third degrees of the scale.

For Example, the chord relationships for C is as follows :

Scale	: C	D	E	F	G	A	B
Degree	: 1	2	3	4	5	6	7
Relationship 1	: C			F	G
Relationship 2	:					Am
Relationship 3	:	D					Bb
Relationship 4	:	Dm	Em

The Circle Of Fifths

The circle of fifths, first described in 1728 by Johann David Heinichen in his book Der Generalbass, has been used ever since as a means of illustrating the relative harmonic distance between musical keys.

The numbers inside the circle show the number of sharps or flats in the key signature, with the sharp keys going clockwise, and the flat keys counterclockwise from C major (which has no sharps or flats.) The circular arrangement depends on enharmonic relationships in the circle, usually reckoned at six sharps or flats for the major keys of $F\sharp = G\flat$ and $D\sharp = E\flat$ for minor keys. Seven sharps or flats make major keys ($C\sharp$ major and $C\flat$ major) that may be more conveniently spelled with five flats or sharps (as $D\flat$ major or B major).
